

CVWO Blog Assignment Write-up

I apologize for not submitting the mid-assignment writeup and submitting this past the deadline. I had been overseas during the holidays with limited connectivity and could only start on this assignment on the 25th. This has been my first time doing web development and I am very grateful of how much I have learnt through this assignment. I have always wanted to learn such skills, and this assignment has been the perfect motivation to do so.

As for the assignment itself, I feel there is much room for improvement. A lot of features could still be added(multiple post pages, search function, comments section, more abstraction, better styling). But given two weeks, I think it is a decent effort.

The assignment required a lot of self-learning, which caused some problems that I faced. There is a wealth of information on the internet(which is good), but there is also a lot of conflict and overload of information. The main problem I faced with self-learning from tutorials on the internet is that sometimes you do not know if what you are learning is the best way or the most up-to-date solution to what you want to do. A lot of times I implemented something, only to find out later that there is a better way to do it. Part of the learning process I guess.

Still, I am content with what I have come up with given the time, but not yet satisfied. I will make it a point to spend more time in the future and further improve myself.

Database Schema

